

Ada Nield-Chew Workshops

Ada Nield-Chew was a Crewe factory worker who became a pioneering campaigner for women's and workers rights, proof that change can start right here, in our own community.

Our Ada workshops use her story to inspire local young people, helping them see that amazing things can come from ordinary places, and that they too have the power to make a difference.

Available as three standalone sessions: Letter Writing, Art, and Drama, each one explores Ada's story through a different creative lens, while building confidence, voice, and self-expression.

Aims:

- To raise aspirations by showing young people that changemakers can come from anywhere, including their own town
- To explore Ada's life and legacy through creative, hands-on activities
- To build confidence, teamwork, and self-expression
- To help young people find and use their own voice

Objectives:

By the end of the workshops, young people will:

- Know who Ada Nield-Chew was and understand her significance as a local changemaker and campaigner for women's rights
- Reflect on the experiences of working women in history and how they connect to issues that matter today
- Express their own thoughts and ideas through writing, art, or drama
- Build confidence in sharing their voice and opinions with others
- Develop teamwork and collaboration skills through creative, group-based activities
- Leave with a stronger sense that they too can speak up and create change

Sessions can be delivered individually or as a series, depending on what works best for your group or setting.
